NOTES AND DOCUMENTS*

OPPONENTS OF APARTHEID SUBJECTED TO BANNING ORDERS IN SOUTH AFRICA

"Banning orders" are one of the arbitrary repressive measures, used by the South African Government to silence and harass opponents of apartheid, which have been condemned repeatedly by United Nations organs.

In resolution 2396 (XXIII) of December 2, 1968, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to establish a register of persons served with banning orders and to publicize it as widely as possible. The Economic and Social Council in resolution 1415 (XLVI) of June 6, 1969, recommended that the General Assembly call upon the South African Government "to rescind immediately the 'Banning Orders' issued under the Suppression of Communism Act against the opponents of apartheid."

This issue of "Notes and Documents" contains a list of those currently banned, together with brief biographical particulars when available.

It will be noted that this list includes persons of all main racial groups in South Africa. It includes Africans as well as Whites, Indians and Coloured people; men and women; doctors, lawyers, teachers, students, priests, workers, writers and members of other professions; and a considerable number of trade unionists. It includes many officers of organizations such as the South African Indian Congress, Coloured Peoples Congress and South African Congress of Trade Unions, which were paralyzed by the banning orders, though the organizations themselves, unlike the African National Congress and the Pan Africanist Congress, were not banned.

The stringent banning orders have prevented a number of persons from continuing their jobs and professions. The restrictions have forced a number of opponents of apartheid to leave South Africa. In some cases, both husband and wife have been banned. The wives of several political prisoners have been banned. Many political prisoners have been served with banning orders immediately after completing their sentences. Others have been served with banning orders when courts acquitted them of political charges.

Though the banning orders are usually for a period of two or five years, they are often renewed. (The names of persons who had been previously banned are marked with an asterisk). Many persons have been subjected for ten or more years to stringent restrictions.

Particularly serious are the restrictions on nearly forty persons subjected under the banning orders to "house arrest". A typical banning and house arrest order - served on Miss Mary Benson, a writer - is reproduced at the end of this section.

Under the Suppression of Communism Act, the Minister of Justice has very wide and arbitrary powers to prohibit a person:

- from entering or being in a certain place (e.g., any African location or trade union office or factory or printing works or publishing house)
- from going outside a particular area or place (e.g., a magisterial district or African reserve or even a flat)
- from communicating with any other person (usually another banned person)
- from receiving any visitors (except an advocate or attorney managing his affairs)
- from attending any gatherings
- from doing specific acts (e.g., teaching, writing for publication).

The definition of "communism" under the Act is so wide and arbitrary that the repressive measures have been applied to opponents of apartheid irrespective of their attitude towards communism.

The banning orders are issued under section 5 (1) (e) or section 9 (1) of the Suppression of Communism Act.

Section 5 (1) (e) provides that the Minister of Justice may require any person who is listed as an officer, member or active supporter of an organization banned for furthering the achievement of any of the objects of communism, or who has been convicted of an offence under the Act, or is a communist:

"(e) not to attend

(i) any gathering; or

(ii) any particular gathering or any gathering of a particular nature, class or kind;

at any place or in any area during any period or on any day or during specified times or periods within any period, except in such cases as may be specified in the notice or as the Minister or a magistrate acting in pursuance of his general or special instructions may at any time expressly authorize."

Section 9 (1) provides that the Minister of Justice may, whenever he is satisfied that any person engages in activities which are furthering or are calculated to further the achievement of any of the objects of communism, prohibit him from attending any gatherings, or any particular gathering or any gathering of a particular nature, class or kind, at any place or in any area during any period or on any day or during specified times or periods within any periods.

The annexed list of banned persons is not fully up-to-date because of delays between the serving of orders and notification in the Official Gazette. It does not include those banned under section 11 (g) of Suppression of Communism Act - which is applied to prohibit publication of writings or speeches of South Africans who have left the country - or under other laws.

The biographical particulars are taken mainly from press reports and are not complete.

The addresses of those who have left South Africa are omitted.
